Due to the long distance, Kusakabe and Sojou had briefly separated. Meanwhile, Sojou's mother ended up in the hospital again, and Kusakabe offered to look after her just as they had been in the process of making up. His mother suddenly died. When Sojou introduced Kusakabe to his father as "my partner," he attacked him saying, "It's your fault that my son became deviant, isn't it?"

T/N: The packets on the floor in panel 3 are purifying salt. After attending a funeral, before entering into their home it's custom for people to either sprinkle the salt on their chest, back, and feet or to spread it on the floor of their entranceway. This purifies themselves from any evil spirits that may be on them or trying to follow them home. It's also believed that if they don't do this, they can't return to their normal lives.
